TITLE: _____

The dissertation or thesis is by intent and tradition a published work announcing the result of the candidate's research to the scholarly community. The University Library holds to the tradition that the candidate has an obligation to make his or her research available to other scholars.

Authors frequently inquire as to their rights after submitting their dissertation or thesis. The author of a manuscript holds common law copyright to it. When the manuscript is published, the author loses common law copyright; the author may, however, acquire statutory copyright. Legal opinion is divided on whether common law copyright is lost only upon actual printing of a manuscript or upon making it publicly available, e.g., by shelving it in a library. The Attorney for the Regents has advised that shelving the dissertation or thesis voids the common law copyright. We therefore ask that authors of dissertations or theses specifically select ONE of the following three options, without conditions, so that the University Library may treat their dissertation or thesis according to their wishes.

1) I do NOT wish to copyright my dissertation or thesis and I GRANT the Library of the University of California at Berkeley permission to furnish reproductions of it in whole or in part to those who may request them.

2) I have applied for copyright of my dissertation or thesis and I GRANT the library of the University of California at Berkeley permission to furnish reproductions of it in whole or in part to those who may require them.

3) I have applied for copyright of my dissertation or thesis and I REFUSE the Library of the University of California at Berkeley permission to furnish reproductions of it in whole or in part for a period of five (5) years*.

*If you select Option 3, the Library will automatically bind, catalog, and shelve the dissertation or thesis but will reject all requests for a reproduction for the prescribed period. At the end of that time, if the work is not available in commercially published form, the Library will, to the extent permitted by law, make copies upon request for research purposes. If, at the end of the withholding period, you wish to extend it because a patent is pending or publication is imminent, you may do so by submitting a NOTARIZED letter to the Library explaining the circumstances. By NOTARIZED letter to the Library, you may also (1) override Option 3 for the purpose of filing a specific request you have received, (2) change Option 3 to Option 2, or (3) change Option 2 to Option 3.
